Permanent Link to GPS OCX software ready for 2018 GPS III launch
2021/06/06

Raytheon Company's GPS OCX program is ready for the U.S. Air Force's launch of the first modernized GPS satellite later this year. Raytheon's GPS Next-Generation Operational Control System, known as GPS OCX, is in its final software development phase. This phase focuses on increasing automation and building controls for both L1C, a civilian GPS signal aimed at increasing international access, and M-code, a military GPS signal with better anti-jam capability. Once complete, the team will begin integration and testing to keep the program on track for full system delivery in June 2021. The GPS Operational Control System's launch and checkout system will control launch and early orbit operations and the on-orbit checkout of all GPS III satellites. (Image: Raytheon) "Our team has two primary goals this year," said Dave Wajsgas, president of Raytheon intelligence, information and services. "We will support the U.S. Air Force's GPS III launch this fall and complete the software build for the full operational system by year's end." GPS OCX is the enhanced ground control segment of a U.S. Air Force-led effort to modernize America's GPS system. The program is implementing 100 percent of DODI 8500.2 "Defense in Depth" information assurance standards without waivers, giving it the highest level of cybersecurity protections of any DoD space system, Raytheon said. For protection against future cyber threats, the system's open architecture allows it to integrate new capabilities and signals as they become available. Because GPS OCX can manage nearly twice the satellites of the current system, it will increase signal strength in hard-to-reach areas like dense cities and mountainous terrain. Also, advanced automation will free crews to focus on mission-critical tasks such as updating satellite positions more often. Learn more about the program's progress here.
